THE BEAUTIFUL GATE.

It is a fair tradition, one of old, That, at the gate of heaven called beautiful, The souls of those to whom we ministered On earth, shall greet us, as we enter in, With graceful records of those lowly deeds Of Christian charity, wherewith frail man Proffers his humble loan unto the Lord. Oh, think, if this be true, how many eyes, Whose weeping thou hast stilled, shall gliste

How many hearts, whose burden thou hast shared, And heavy feet, whose steps were turned by thee Back to their homes elastic through the joy Of new found hope, and sympathy, and love, Shall welcome thee within the gates of bliss-The gorden city of Jerusalem.

Gen. Jos. H. Geiger.

"Snapping Turtles, Human and Animal."

HIS LECTURE AT THE OPERA HOUSE LAST FRIDAY NIGHT.

THE BEST LECTURE OF THE SEASON, WITH THE ELITE AND FASHION OF THE CITY IN ATTENDANCE.

It was full of fun, humor, telling hits, serious reflections, and pointed morals drawn from the "chelonia." Not as large an audience as the merits of the speaker demanded was in attendance, but those that were there left delighted, instructed and well pleased that they were present.

The lecturer commenced in a humorous, yet clear tone of voice, which of itself was a sufficient incentive to laughter. He said before he left Columbus his friends had predicted that he could not get an audience in Toledo of 33 respectable people. He was very glad to see that they more than doubled that calculation. [Laughter.] He was very happy to see them all there that evening, and as they had to do their part of the business, he supposed, that for the privilege presence, they were all equally glad to see him, as they should be for that privilege. It was not often that he had the privilege of addressing such an audience as that before him, and it was not often that they had the privilege of hearing such a man as himself; [laughter] and therefore they were in a manner equally congratulated. As an old lady in Pennsylvania once said: she had tried for five years to get a contented mind and could not get it, and now she was determined to be content without it. | Laughthey would have one of the best socials they had ever seen in the city of Toledo. He knew it would be a strain upon their nerves, a trial to their endurance, and a man, and he would let him alone, if he least the first here they had ever seen in the city of Toledo. He knew it would be a strain upon their man, and he would let him alone, if he least the first here they had been in and looking over his spectacles he innocently asked: "Wouldn't I have been a beauty?" [Laughter.] He thought all old maids good, and God had simply prestretch upon their seats, and they would probably make strong and earnest pleadand he could assure them they would have his prayers for their success.

There had been some controversy regarding his personal appearance, in Ohio, among the newspapers. The Springfield Republic said he was the homeliest man in the State. The London Enterprise said he was the best looking man in Columbus, [laughter] and the Springfield Tran-[Laughter.] Because the passions may He knew not what others might think, he could say what few could, he had improved. When he was quite a baby, at home in old Pennsylvania, his mother was holding him upon her knee; and he was sick and cross tempered. There was a man that stepped up and looked at him, and he was squalling and screaming and yelling. Says the man: 'Mrs. Geiger, there is a great deal of comfort in having that kind of a brat.' 'Why?" answered his mother, who did not particularly see any. "Well," said the man, "he might live to be a thousand years of age and he will never be any uglier." [Laughter.]

[Laughter.]

He could compliment them by promiswould go away satisfied, and if by that had. [Laughter.] That was what distinguished him. [Laughter.] Some men were like old coffee mills—had an idea A to that they should run faster when they were empty than when they were full. They go on until their words become like self-righteousness, the more you have of it the worse you are off. [Laugh-There they have a minister of the Gospel, going on, and on, until the congregation were perfectly exhausted, and they solemnly begin to consider whether the United States had procured from the jury retired to deliberate.

At the opening of the court it would not be a little better to go to France to fight England with. They had the——than be saved by such preaching. They will have to patiently wait sight of a much larger vessel belonging begun. At twenty-five minutes past three until he has gone over his firstly, his to the English. A fight was commenced, until he has gone over his firstly, his secondly, his thirdly and his fourthly. His "in conclusion," and finally, lastly, and a "few practical observations," until the congregation will have exclained from their hearts, "How long, oh! Lord how long?" [Laughter.] They had here a lawyer beating the air with his arms, disturbing the court, the jury and lower his firstly, his to the English. A fight was commenced, and the firing was heavy and continuous. The poor old hulk was drifting slowly, helplessly, almost hopelessly, to the side of the adversary's ship. Still the side of the adversary's ship. Still they kept up courage. Further did they defend ant not guilty." Some demonstrations in favor of the defendant were made, but were quickly stopped. There was a general hand shaking, however, and General the bystanders with his exemplary remarks, until his beholders begin to look upon him something like as they would the mathematic definition of a line "length without breadth or depth." and all the time drifting nearer the each juryman and thanked them kindly antagonist, "Have you surrendered?" for their verdict. The General and his [Laughter.] Yet they had been compelled to listen to it. Politicians were noted for their long-winded endurance in making speeches. They would go on for hours humbugging their listeners with their windyness, and it cost more the prize, which so recently bore aloft for the Government of the United States the Union Jack, now sailed proudly beto pay for these foolish harangues in Congress than it did to keep up her foreign relations. He knew it to be so from experience, as he, himself, had served in the Ohio Senate, and since then he had concluded that if God would forgive him for that offence he would never attempt to repeat it. [Laughter.] On one occa-sion he calculated to gain for himself a reputation. He was ambitious and was aspiring to write a name on high that half. [Laughter.] When the question was first mooted about him delivering his talk, or his lecture, before a Toledo audience he thought he was entirely too long winded for westhey thought he could draw. He re-plied, "Yes, of course I can draw," The to draw [laughter] my breath, [renewed | scent, [laughter] for he does not know | Mercury.

[Laughter,] His next effort to draw might want him to call around in their was to draw cider through a bunghole with a piece of straw, and in that he was a complete success. He could draw literary men from their studies, scholars how some people vainly boasted of their go down to their graves in sorrow, be-

go down to their graves in sorrow, be-cause they had missed that opportunity of hearing him. [Laughter.]

As they had read, "No prophet is with-out honor, save in his own country."

That infallible utterance, given years ago, was still valid. We have prophets, in our own day, who are noted for their talents, and eminent for their learning, and yet they seem to be disregarded. They had to import learning from other places. Ohio was a great and mighty State, great in her own resources, great in the extent of her dominions, and mighty and renowned as being the abode of himself and the "immortal J. N." [Laughter.] It was high time that they pay attention to and commence to like and preserve their own distinguished from it, and as the gambler once said, when asked to insure his life in an insurance company, "There is no fun in a game you have to die to win." He went on at some length characterizing the lack of interest manifested in relation to literary subjects, the apathy there was for any of their own distinguished men, and the antagonism many new prophets had.

The further was very independent. At the antagonism many new prophets had to contend with. He lauded the State of Ohio as having furnished men and Gentry, and all the other animals went into erals for the army, having sent its men to the Senate, and as having furnished two of the Presidents of the United States.

and a dishonor to the State of Ohio Permit him, then, to return to his legitimate subject. His lecture, like others, would be composed of words! words!! that it was generally damp.

The "Snapping Turtle" does not believe in carrying tales; but it believes in words!!! And everything depended on the universal privilege and independence the manner in which he used those of being your own "boss." He generally words. Their arrangement and context has a shut mouth, although he can open so as to make a humorous lecture. If at it as wide as he pleases, Something like of appearing in his august and mighty the conclusion, his arrangement of the an old maid, of whom he once heard. words did not suit them, they could just throw them together to suit themselves. [Laughter.] He had not chosen to adbachelor himself, [laughter] and there dress them on Light, Heat or Electricity, because he was not a scientific man. But if he had chosen any one of these subjects he would have gone to his encycloped and the matter recently, to show his earnest-ness, he said that "if there was any old mail recent who was strictly respect." pedia, and in two days he could have maid present, who was strictly respectapedia, and in two days he could have stolen therefrom a lecture, and have committed it to memory, which would, upon its delivery, cause the people to gape with wonder, and remark, "What a clever little old fellow that is." [Laughter.] But, as Moncure D. Conway said:
"I know nothing about it." He knew ion that the preferred the recommendation of the stand for five minutes after the lecture, and she could come up. And if she suited me and I suited her; why, if I did not marry her myself, I would refer her to somebody else." [Roars of laughter.] An old maid sent him word next morning that she preferred the recommendation. very little about the last mentioned man, ing that she preferred the recommendater.] If they would be patient, and try and from what he had heard, he thought and be pleased with what they heard, that the less he knew the better. He wished he had been born an old maid;

Patrick, you are not afraid to meet your God, are you?" "No, your reverence," said the Irishman, "it is the other gentleman I'm afraid to meet." [Laughter.] The great subject of American panegyric, was the eagle. He was certainly of noble birth, and was a bird of undisputed good qualities. A turtle never knows what it is to quit -he always holds on. He has as his motto, "Never give up; stick till the last." the turtle. It was good for any man to fight on, labor on, "for while there is life there is Lope." Years ago, when Paul from the English ship, and slowly she was sinking beneath the seething waters, and all the time drifting nearer the when the commander of the sinking ship replied, "No, by heavens! we have not began to fight yet." [Applause.] The adversary's ship was boarded, whilst the companies of the sinking for their verdict. The General and his friends then left the court and started for their hotel. To return to this legitimate subject. The turtle was amphibious. He can live on the water or on the land, or wallow in the mud to his satisfaction. He could eat fish, flesh or fowl, and when hard pressed can get away with a little men, and encamped them near the Bat-boarding house hash. [Laughter.] The tery to prevent the British General Clinturtle, like all philosophers of might and ton, who had arrived in the bay two power, can bear the sufferings of others hours before, from taking possession of with much more resignation than he can his own. Like Napoleon he is grand, was successful, and the English force regloomy and peculiar, and like George Washington, he never told a lie. Like Lord Byron, he is philanthropic, and Brooklyn, by Washington, soon decided realizes the force of the saying, "Why the fate of the city. Last Friday was the tern men. They asked him whether should I for others mourn when none will sigh for me?"
